Working with Grief and Loss

Date: Friday 13 October 2017, 10am – 4pm

Trainers: Jenny Riddell, individual and couple psychoanalytic psychotherapist

As therapists we may work with clients who are dealing with bereavement, infertility, miscarriage and child death, the end of a relationship, redundancy, illness or retirement. The painful feelings of loss and grief that clients bring to therapy can seem overwhelming – for the therapist as well as for the clients.

This day-long interactive workshop will explore how we as therapists can help our clients through the mourning process.

The workshop will look at the psychological factors that influence the grieving process, common reactions after a bereavement or major loss, unresolved grief, and factors which might prevent clients from mourning and moving on.

Couple Therapy for Depression Training

Dates: Wednesday 8 – Friday 10 November 2017 (Level 1);
Monday 6 – Friday 10 November 2017 (Level 2)

Couple Therapy for Depression is an integrated, NICE-approved, evidence-based model for the treatment of depression where relationship distress is seen as having a causal or maintaining factor in the illness, or where the relationship is seen as a resource for recovery.

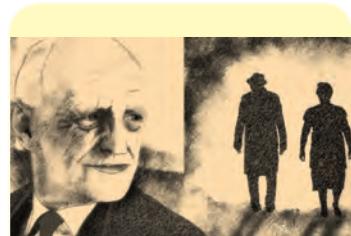

This training aims to develop clinicians' skills and abilities in working with relational factors in the context of depression to enable couples to use their relationship as a resource to cope better with depression. Previously this training was only open to IAPT staff in an NHS setting but Tavistock Relationships now recognises this way of working can be applied in wider settings, so now, for the first time, in November it is open to all clinicians who have experience of working with couples.

Cost: £1,900 (Level 1); £2,400 (Level 2), which includes formal accreditation as a Couple Therapy for Depression practitioner and being listed on Tavistock Relationships' Couple Therapy for Depression website and list of qualified practitioners.

Venue: Tavistock Relationships, Warren Street, London, W1T 5PB

Autumn Conference 2017: Winnicott and the Couple

Date: Saturday 11 November 2017, 9.30am – 4.30pm

Speakers: Angela Joyce (Chair of the Winnicott Trust, co-author of Reading Winnicott), Brett Kahr (author of Tea with Winnicott and D W Winnicott: A Biographical Portrait) and David Hewison (Jungian analyst and couple psychoanalytic psychotherapist)

The importance of aliveness, vitality and creativity pervades the work of D W Winnicott as a paediatrician, child psychiatrist, and psychoanalyst. He wrote about the development of the False Self in infancy and childhood, when the unfolding of the infant/child's individual personality is overwhelmed by the needs of others (usually the parent). The False Self allows the child to survive and be accepted but at the cost of aliveness and vitality.

This conference aims to look at how Winnicott's life and work can help inform our therapeutic work with couples. How can each member of a couple maintain their individuality and still feel loved and accepted? Do some relationships stifle the ability to think and grow in a creative manner?

Cost: £130 (£120 if booked and paid for by 30 September 2017)

Exploration in The Greener Grass: Understanding Envy in Working with Couple Dynamics

Date: Saturday 10 March 2018, 10am – 4pm

Trainer: Martha Doniach, psychoanalytic psychotherapist; and Kate Thompson, couple psychoanalytic psychotherapist

Envy can be difficult to work with and, perhaps because of this, it can be easy to overlook in the consulting room. This study day will explore envy as an intrinsic component of intimate relationships – including the therapeutic one.

It has been 60 years since Melanie Klein's Envy and Gratitude was published. Her concept of primary envy saw the roots of envy lying in the inevitably unequal relationship between mother and infant.

Envy, with its links with the projective system, repetition, destructiveness and potential reparation, still remains at the heart of psychoanalytically-oriented work with couples and individuals.

An examination of envy and its workings will involve discussions around greed, oedipal dilemmas, humiliation, dependency, jealousy, gratitude and love.

This study day will include lectures, experiential work and clinical presentations. Participants are asked to bring cases and to be prepared to think about where envy is located in their clinical work with individuals, couples and families, and how it might be addressed.
